> Many students in their final years of high school feel under pressure when they choose a university department. According to a recent survey of 2,000 teenagers, 45% said they chose their field because of their families' expectations, while only 30% chose a subject they really enjoyed. Experts suggest that students should research different careers, talk to professionals and, if possible, do short internships before deciding. "Your interests and skills matter more than other people's opinions," says career counsellor Deniz Aksu. She also reminds students that changing direction later in life is not a failure but part of lifelong learning.

Read the model. Then write an opinion paragraph (100–120 words): Should schools start later in the morning? (Modeli oku. Sonra 100–120 kelimelik bir görüş paragrafı yaz: Okullar sabah daha geç başlamalı mı?)

Model: Should homework be banned? In my opinion, homework should not be banned, but it should be limited. Firstly, short tasks help students revise what they learnt in class. Secondly, homework teaches responsibility and time management. However, too much homework causes stress and leaves no time for sport or family. To sum up, I believe one hour of homework a day is enough.
